The project is expected to take up to two years to complete but is scheduled to open for Islamic prayer services during construction sometime this year.. The mosque reopened its door to Muslim worshippers in 2014 after having been a museum for 52 years.. İsmet Çalık, the provincial director of historical sites in Trabzon, told reporters that the electronic shields would be clear but able to be darkened at the press of a button so that Muslim worshipers wouldn't see the paintings while engaging in religious services at the mosque.. The former Hagia Sofia church was constructed by the Byzantine Emperor Manuel I Komnenos, a Christian crusader, during his reign over regions including Northern Turkey between 1238 and 1263.. The Hagia Sofia Mosque, which was originally built between 1238 and 1263 as a medieval church, was renamed the Center Mosque in 2014 when it was converted from a museum.. A restoration effort will be performed at the Hagia Sofia Mosque in the province of Trabzon in northeastern Turkey, the Hurriyet Daily News Thursday.

The restoration process is estimated to cost just over $500,000 and will feature an electric shielding system placed in front of the Byzantine-era Christian paintings and frescoes adorning some of its walls.. Restoration plans also include creating a walking path made of natural stones surrounding the mosque.. "When we push the button, all mural paintings will become opaque Thus, people will be able to worship without any influence from paintings," Çalık said.
